

I choose freely to pay for a radio service unlike any available via standard broadcast techniques. Its diverse formats of music and news, coupled with concise full time weather and traffic, have made it indispensable to my family. During our lengthy drives every weekend (made necessary by my work as an EMT) we rely implicitly on XM Radio's weather and traffic. This is still America, and my right to choose is still guaranteed. I choose XM Radio.

If the standard broadcasters don't like it, tell them to get their act together and provide better services. Personally, I'd enjoy NOT having to pay for the quality of service I require, but until then I've made my choice.
